AutoCAD supports both 2D and 3D drawing and design. 2D drawing is used to create architectural and engineering designs. 3D drawing is used to create 3D computer-generated models and visualizations. Because 2D drawings and 3D models both use coordinate systems, AutoCAD supports both 2D and 3D drawing and design. 2D drawing is used to create architectural and engineering designs. 3D drawing is used to create 3D computer-generated models and visualizations. BICON BICON (Bayesian inference from Co-ordinate data) is a method for two-dimensional data inference. AutoCAD enables users to create BICON models using data input from 2D drawings. In effect, the BICON method involves the conversion of 2D model data into 3D volumetric data, which can be manipulated to determine the most likely results of every possible scenario. A BICON model is primarily a mathematical model of 3D probabilities. AutoCAD provides users with several different methods for constructing BICON models: Selecting a predefined data set to use for BICON. Selecting a point pattern as a starting point from which a BICON model can be constructed. Applying BICON modeling techniques to a group of 2D drawings, with the resulting BICON model containing a list of 2D sections that are most likely to have existed. In addition to the Autodesk Exchange App store, third-party add-on apps are offered for use in AutoCAD. These apps are designed to be integrated with the native tools of AutoCAD, and are a main source of AutoCAD plugins. Third-party developers can code applications that automate various operations within AutoCAD. Add-ons must be listed for the release year they are available for. They must be signed and submitted to the Autodesk Exchange store in order to be installed on the user's machine. A number of add-on applications were made available by Autodesk, starting in AutoCAD 1999. Since the release of AutoCAD 2016, additional add-ons have been made available by third-party developers. AutoCAD 2017, released in May 2016, added a new application store: the Autodesk Exchange apps. Top DJ Stops Playing at Trump Tower To Protest Being Forced Out of Middle East By Elliott LaForce Posted September 12, 2016 His music is less politically charged than some, but you can still hear A-Trak's hits blasting from Trump Tower. This week, the embattled DJ Adler is playing a different kind of tune: "The protest I'm having right now is against people [with] the power to get me fired." A-Trak's reaction to the Republican presidential nominee's victory in the US election was one of a number of musicians that have gone public with their objections to Trump's policies. Adler is one of many DJs who have said they will no longer play at Trump-branded venues, including the Trump Tower and the Trump National Doral in Florida. According to a statement from the DJ, posted on Facebook, the reason is Trump's ban on people from seven majority-Muslim countries entering the United States. "As you may be aware, the Trump campaign has made the decision to bar immigrants from seven majority-Muslim countries from entering the United States. This action is unacceptable and unconstitutional," said the statement. "I'm not a political activist but I believe that this action is morally wrong and dangerous." He added that his decision to stop playing shows at Trump Tower was a1d647c40b
