The article was written by Christos Charitidis and originally appeared on ImgSentry. Microsoft Excel is the most popular spreadsheet software you can use, but what if you want more detailed information when you're calculating the profit on a business? While general calculations can be done in this program, there are other features specifically designed to perform the most intricate of tasks. In this article, we'll cover why you need to use a feature called Solver and how to achieve the best results using this little-used but very powerful tool. Quick background Solver is the standard tool for computing solutions to problems in math. It was first developed in the early 1980s by Microsoft to solve the quadratic equation. In its more advanced versions, it was later introduced to the business world in order to solve more complex business calculations. This feature is actually hardcoded into Excel, so it uses a special algorithm when you enter a problem such as adding up all values in one column. All the results can be displayed in your chosen format, so for example you can choose to display the result as a number or a percentage. The number of calculations that can be entered into a cell are displayed when you change the input cell. The results are also displayed as percentages when you change the output cell. You can also apply different input formats for each of the multiple rows and columns. For example, the formula in cell E19 looks like this: =SUM(S$4:S$8) and changes to =SUM(E$4:E$8) when the output cell is edited. The formula in cell E20 looks like this: =SUM(D$4:D$8)*0.5 and changes to =SUM(E$4:E$8)
