Excited to see more of the combat system, and how the ring was applied to the world. Plus idk, it looks pretty dope, I think. I just... really want to see human characters actually be able to fill a role as a mage or a wizard in this world. The Elden Ring Activation Code already kind of ruined the fantasy aspect of the world for me, but this is the first I've heard of someone actually being able to do something that mattered. But no one in this game doesn't seem to have gear bigger than a village peddler's wares, so they kind of just look like normal people, so... yeah, I guess you kind of have to get used to that. Can't wait to see the other reviews of this game. Hopefully they'll be as positive as this is. Let's not forget the ranger. Also a nice change for a fantasy game. The ranger has the same stances, axes, and other weapons as the warrior. Very nice. So yeah, the rangers look pretty badass, but im a ranger. I don't really like the look of them, but they're better than warriors. And it's more realistic for a Ranger to use the bow and arrow. The ranger has enhanced stance changes to fit this style of game too. I don't know how I feel about how the game looks, but it seems they got their combat and party mechanics more down than most fantasy games I'm glad there's lots of options for customization and weapon upgrades. That's always a plus. And lastly, I hope that the story works! I have no idea how this'll play out, and I'll be quite surprised if I like the game in the end, but I'm glad it exists. It's an action RPG, so everyone's expectations are lower than the stories we get in DnD. Oh yeah, it takes place in a world we know about, I think it's the Elden Ring, and it's the only magic country that's not evil. The Elden Ring came from there. I don't really know how that world functions. It's mostly the Elden Ring, but also peoples from other countries. So if you choose to not become an Elden Lord, bff6bb2d33

An officer in Zimbabwe has found himself in hot water for saying on Facebook that white people are not intelligent. The incident happened at Harare's Gweru barracks recently, according to Newsweek. More than 2.8 million Zimbabweans are practicing Christians, while two-thirds of the population are practicing Muslims. Just before the 30th anniversary of independence, the percentages are less than one in five belong to either of these religions. In response to an incident in which whites were treated as subhumans in Zimbabwe, Constables Superintendent Moya Kahiya directed the Harare Magistrate's Court that all people are citizens and entitled to equal protection. "That this Court directs that all persons in Zimbabwe be accorded equal rights at all times. Their equal right to life and property extends to all regardless of race, color, gender, ethnic origin, religious belief or convictions, political parties or opinion, nationality or birth as well as any other classification," the court order stated. Kahiya also directed the chief public defender to review all cases dealing with the issue of racial discrimination. He concluded, "I would therefore also direct that in our respective centres of jurisdiction all matters of racial discrimination be referred to this Court for appropriate consideration and determination with a view to seeing that each and every person in the lands of Zimbabwe is accorded equal opportunity and is not discriminated against." A surprisingly tiny number of whites have committed rape in Zimbabwe, The Daily Telegraph reports. "
