Quickshot is a Bangalore, India based software product development and realization company run by engineers and entrepreneurs. Quickshot was created by the Bengaluru-based 3 D Printers P. Ltd. in February 2014, and first began to produce hardware products. The company recognized market opportunities in what it described as “a new era for 3D printing” in August 2014. A unique aspect of Quickshot's offerings are found on Inventables, a website and online magazine created in January 2014. Quickshot's first consumer product was an open-source 3D printer named, Open Print ("OpenPrint"), a printer aimed for both home and professional use. The printer was later redesigned as dual-head, as Prabhu commented "we still believe that this is the best platform to do this work." By January 2018, Quickshot started mass producing and selling its own dual-head printers under the brand, “Printersmith”. The first mass market commercial printer was the Inventor Pro, with a print volume of approximately 5 L. Inventors Pro The Inventor Pro is a commercial production 3D printer made by Quickshot. It was released on April 26, 2018 and is manufactured with a dual 2D print path and two 2 kg Inventive FPE linear drives. It is a desktop-replacement 3D printer. It has a print volume between 5 and 50 L. The Inventor Pro can be mounted vertical and horizontal. The print volume is with respect to its stand, with the print head moving on a table-like system. The printer can also be mounted on a wall with its Wi-Fi and Ethernet connectivity to connect to an access point. The frame is 3 mm thick steel with flat sides and ends. On each side of the printer, the cases have holes, and they are used to hold the internal parts. The engineers of Quickshot claimed that the frame has been made with a specific quality control process and it is resistant to corrosion. The outer body has a transparent resin shell. Accessories included are grip, blade oil, shrink tube and touch panel. The PSF version also comes with a plastic frame, but not totally transparent.
