The Solution Manual for Theories of Machines.pdf This book:Q: Why does the same application crashing on different OS X versions? We are developing a graphical application which works fine on the newest OS X version - Yosemite, but crashes under Mavericks and Lion. It uses C++, Qt, and the Cocoa frameworks. The application is compiled on Snow Leopard with the Mach-O framework installed, and builds OK. In Mountain Lion and Lion, it crashes on initialization with a SIGABRT signal. (It is not crashing in the middle of the initialisation, at least). The strange thing is that in Yosemite (10.10), it works fine. The crash happens in a custom function called with an extern "C" call (to get the right C++-compatible linkage). We are guessing that an OS difference in Cocoa's implementation of signals and the X windows framework could be the cause. Has anyone any idea why the same application should be crashing on different OS X versions? A: See this question about why it is crashing and what the link might be. Here is a post with a workaround for Yosemite.
