Machines such as, for example, dozers, motor graders, wheel loaders, haul trucks, and other types of heavy equipment are used to perform many tasks. For example, these machines may be used to move material at a work site. In another example, these machines may be used to mill, break, or crush material. Typically, these machines include a power source, such as one or more engines, that power one or more implements via hydraulic actuators. For example, many dozers include a boom with an attached implement such as a bucket or blade. The boom may be raised and lowered via a lift arm coupled to the boom. An example of such a machine is the CAT 300 dozer, made by Caterpillar Inc. of Peoria, Ill. In order to increase the ability of the machine operator to maneuver the machine, the machine may be equipped with a machine vision system. The vision system may capture images of the machine surroundings and provide a representation of the captured images to the operator. For example, such a system may be used to display an image of the bucket as viewed by the camera in relation to a specific location on the machine. Typically, in order to display such images, the vision system uses a laser projector, such as a laser range finder, to project a laser pattern onto the ground to provide a reference location for the image capture. In some cases, the laser projector may be mounted
