for power scaling of the heat release from nanoconfined fluids.
The calorimetric study of confined fluids gives information of their thermal dynamics, which can be used for different applications. In this article, after exploring the Haff's view on local equilibrium between the heat (H) and the work (W) performed by the fluid, the thermodynamic arguments in terms of local equilibrium and local equilibrium partition are recalled. The heat capacity of the fluid and the excess entropy are derived in terms of the local densities of the fluid and the constraint fluid. From these properties, the heat release from the fluid at different volumes in the systems is calculated."
